INTRODUCTION

The world of books encompasses classics of international renown and ephemeral pamphlets circulated locally, esoteric treatises on obscure subjects and collections of jokes or cartoons, technical manuals and practical everyday how-to-do-it instructions. A handicapped person should be, but often is not, free to read independently and at his own convenience with the same choice of materials as is open to his friends and business associates at a bookstore or public library. It is only through the dedicated efforts of volunteers who produce reading materials not otherwise available that he may attain this degree of variety in his reading. Whether the volunteer transcribes an economics textbook for a college student or a series of Supreme Court decisions for a lawyer, hers is a contribution of special merit.

This directory lists the names of individuals and groups who transcribe books and other reading materials for blind and physically handicapped persons. It has been compiled by the Volunteer Services Section of the Division for the Blind and Physically Handicapped of the Library of Congress and is available in both print and braille. The listing is geographical by state; services and specialties are indexed numerically. Services are braille transcribing, large-type printing, tape recording, duplication, and binding; specialties include music, math, and languages. In separate sections are the proofreaders certified by the Library of Congress and state special education consultants.

What This Directory Can Do For You

(1) You are a student who needs a tape recorded book in French for a college course; you have written to the Library of Congress and the American Printing House and been informed that the title is not available:

In the listing of specialties look under "French"; using the index numbers, locate a volunteer group near you that does tape recording and write to the Chairman asking her assistance.

(2) You are chairman of a volunteer group transcribing textbooks for students in your city. One textbook includes musical examples, and none of the members of your group knows braille music notation:

In the listing of specialties look under "Music"; using the index numbers, locate a volunteer group near you that transcribes braille music and ask the assistance of that chairman.

(3) Again, as chairman of a volunteer group concerned chiefly with braille transcribing, you wish to have your proofreading assignments done in the most expeditious manner:

The section "Proofreaders Certified by the Library of Congress" is arranged geographically by state. There you will be able to locate the proofreaders closest to you and thus be able to apportion your proofreading so as to take advantage of comparatively lighter workloads as well as avoid unnecessary shipping delays.

(4) You are a businessman and newly-elected president of the Lions Club. You need a braille copy of the constitution, annual report and other basic documents of the organization, as well as the monthly reports of chairmen and officers throughout the year:

In the geographic listing of volunteers, look under your state and locate a group in a town or neighborhood near you. Explain your situation to the group chairman and ask her assistance.

(5) You are a certified braille transcriber who has moved to a new city and would like to affiliate with a group:

In the geographic listing, look under your state and town to locate a group. If there is no group in your community and you want to continue brailleing, notify Volunteer Services Section and in the next edition of this directory you will have an individual listing.

These are a few of the ways this directory may be used. Please let us know if there are any other features we could add to make it more valuable to you. Additions and corrections will be published in a later edition of the directory.

Volunteer Services Section

Along with serving as a coordinator of volunteer activities, this Section trains braillists and proofreaders through correspondence; examines test transcriptions from braillists throughout the country for certification; assigns books for transcription upon request; directs the proofreading, duplicating, binding, and other processing of books received from volunteers for the Library of Congress; evaluates audition tapes; reviews tape-recorded books; and instructs in proper use of equipment and voice.

If you wish to become a volunteer braille transcriber, but prefer personal instruction to the correspondence course, you will find that most of the organized groups sponsor classes in braille. Many also offer instruction in tape recording and guidelines for presentation of large type materials.

You are cordially invited to visit the Division for the Blind and Physically Handicapped in our new quarters at 1291 Taylor Street, N. W. We have ample parking space on the roof for those of you who are driving.

THE ORIGIN OF BRAILLE

A blind high-school student takes from a library shelf a volume of the 145-volume braille edition of the World Book Encyclopedia and consults it for information he needs to write a theme for class. A blind college student pecks away with a braille slate and stylus or braillewriter, taking notes from a lecture by one of his professors. A blind sports enthusiast consults the schedule of his favorite baseball team transcribed for him in braille by a volunteer transcriber. A somewhat more convivial individual sits at a table with a group of friends, sighted and/or blind, enjoying a game of poker or canasta, with the sighted players scarcely aware that the cards are marked in braille. A blind businessman jots down a telephone number in his loose-leaf braille telephone book where he keeps a list of numbers he calls frequently. A blind housewife looks in her Better Homes and Gardens braille cookbook for a tasty recipe for a dish to serve expected guests. Smitten with misgivings about the excess calories, she may step onto a bathroom scale marked in braille with the hope of reassurance. A less domestic type may recline in bed (with lights out) enjoying the braille edition of a best-selling novel, the latest issue of Reader's Digest or National Geographic. All of these individuals owe an immeasurable debt of gratitude to the ingenuity and pioneering spirit of Louis Braille.

In the year 1809, the stars must have been heavily fraught with fate. That year witnessed the birth of Abraham Lincoln, whose life was to have such a momentous influence on the American political and social structure; Edgar Allan Poe, who was to have a lasting influence on literature by creating the short story form; and Charles Darwin, whose Origin of Species was to influence scientific thinking and arouse philosophic controversy for decades. Also in that fateful year was born in the little village of Coupvray, France, a man whose effect on the education of the blind dwarfs anything that has been done before or since. That man was Louis Braille, and his contribution was to devise a system of reading and writing for the blind based upon various combinations of raised dots. This system, basically unchanged but enlarged and somewhat modified to accommodate the characteristics of different languages, is used by the blind throughout the civilized world today and bears the name of its creator, braille.

Louis Braille's father was a harnessmaker, and at the age of three, the boy injured his eye with an awl while playing in his father's shop. Infection and eventually blindness resulted. When he was ten, Louis entered the Institute for Blind Youth in Paris. This school was founded by Valentin Haüy, who had been able to make a very few books available for his blind students by embossing enlarged letters. However, this "line letter" system was difficult to master; reading necessarily was slow; there was no way for the blind to write it themselves. The few books available only succeeded in whetting Braille's insatiable hunger for more reading and knowledge.

When Louis was twelve, a retired army captain named Barbier visited the school. He had devised a system of raised dots and dashes representing different sounds in the French language which he had used for sending orders to his men at night; he suggested that it might be useful in teaching the blind. The authorities at the school flatly rejected Barbier's "night writing", as they were convinced that a system of reading used by the blind must approximate as nearly as possible that employed by the sighted. Braille, however, like a true pioneer, was prepared to take a completely fresh approach, free from preconceived notions and designed to meet the special circumstances and needs of the blind. To him, Barbier's "night writing" was the key for which he had been searching. He abandoned Barbier's dashes and devised his system based on different arrangements of six dots, representing letters rather than sounds.

Braille's system has proved wonderfully adaptable for use in various languages. A large number of contractions have been added to conserve space and increase speed of reading. These contractions vary with the language, depending upon the frequency of occurrence of different combinations of letters. It has also been possible to represent diacritical and phonetic markings in braille, such as those used to indicate pronunciation in dictionaries.

Braille himself designed a system for representing musical notation. This has since been greatly enlarged and codified. The same symbols which represent letters in braille can be used to represent numbers by preceding them with a special braille symbol known as the number sign. For technical purposes, a highly complex system of mathematical and scientific notation has recently been developed. Braille printing presses and braille typewriters have greatly increased the volume of braille literature now available to the blind. Automation, too, has entered the field of braille, and computers have been programmed to produce braille in the less technical areas.

During Braille's lifetime, the authorities never accepted his revolutionary system; today, however, his coffin rests in the Pantheon among the greatest immortals of French history, and his home in Coupvray is preserved as a shrine. May his spirit of imaginative innovation, realism and dedication be similarly enshrined by modern educators of the blind!
